

Door-to-Door Sales (Multi-Level Marketing)

With the KFTC's shift to consumer protections as opposed to regulating cartels and business groups, the Act on Door-to-Door Sales has come into greater focus in recent years. Administrative fines for violations of the Door-to-Door Sales Act have increased dramatically in recent years to billions of Korean Won a year, along with substantially increased referrals for criminal indictments.

Shin & Kim's antitrust & competition team has vast experience and a significant track record for successfully representing clients in KFTC investigations for violations of the Door-to-Door Sales Act and in advising corporate clients on door-to-door sales. We have achieved successful outcomes representing many multi-level sales businesses in the investigation stage as well as clients facing administrative and criminal proceedings.

In particular, with strict regulations on multi-level sales currently in place and the Supreme Court's rigid notion of multi-level sales, a preliminary legal assessment of potential violations of the Door-to-Door Sales Act is essential in developing a viable business structure and sales strategy. To this end, Shin & Kim's antitrust and competition team provides practical guidance and solutions to avoid potential violations of the Door-to-Door Sales Act.
