Since beginning his legal career as a public-service advocate in 2004, Mr. Changhun Lee has built extensive experience as a legal practitioner. He is currently a partner at Shin & Kim, where he serves as the Head of both the AI & Digital Competition Team and the Investigation Team within the firm's Antitrust & Competition Group. In 2021, he was appointed to Shin & Kim's Management Committee and has since been actively involved in the firm's management.

Early in his career as a public-service advocate, Mr. Lee handled various matters involving the Korean government and administrative agencies, including multiple cases relating to the Status of Forces Agreement (SOFA) between Korea and the United States. Since joining Shin & Kim in 2007, Mr. Lee has spent nearly two decades representing multinational clients before the Korea Fair Trade Commission (KFTC) and the courts across a wide range of antitrust and competition matters involving AI & Digital Competition, Competition in the ICT industry, Competition in the platform sector, cartels, abuse of market dominance, unfair trade practices, improper subsidies, and subcontracting issues. He has also played leading roles in a number of high-profile disputes with significant public and social implications.

Mr. Lee has an extensive track record in high-profile domestic and international antitrust matters and is widely recognized by clients for his strategic acumen, exceptional command of complex cases, and unwavering client advocacy—often described as "shark-like" for its tenacity and determination. He rose to prominence in a landmark abuse-of-dominance investigation involving a global semiconductor company, widely regarded as a defining case in Korean competition law. Moreover, in a notable cartel dispute, he represented a global electronics manufacturer and secured a complete victory against multiple major law firms, defeating the restitution claims in their entirety. Substantial portions of his written submissions were cited verbatim in the court's judgment.

Reflecting his standing in the field of antitrust and competition law, Mr. Lee currently serves as a Planning Director of the Korean Competition Law Association, an External Affairs Director of the Platform Law & Policy Association, a Steering Committee Member of the Seoul National University Center for Competition Law, a Director of the Korea Competition Forum, and an Advisory Counsel of the Korea Information & Communication Industry Institute. Since 2019, he has also been invited by Chambers and Partners to contribute to the Korea chapter of the annual Chambers Global Practice Guide covering cartel and antitrust litigation.

Mr. Lee also has extensive experience in complex corporate litigation. He has successfully represented clients in a broad range of leading civil and commercial disputes, including high-profile matters requiring significant technical and economic expertise. In particular, he has substantial experience representing defendants in multi-party damages lawsuits. His representative matters include collective action alleging health injuries arising from vehicle emissions, KIKO-related litigation, damages lawsuits involving allegations of collusion among major conglomerates, and a cartel-related damages lawsuit brought by consumers against automobile manufacturers. He was also directly involved in a U.S. class action against Korean ramen manufacturers following the KFTC's sanctions in a ramen cartel matter. Mr. Lee is among the relatively few practitioners in Korea with both hands-on experience and recognized expertise in class and collective actions.

Mr. Lee passed the New York State Bar Examination after completing his studies in the United States and subsequently gained experience working at the global law firm Steptoe & Johnson LLP.
